Trading stagnated on the Zagreb Stock Exchange as investors showed little interest for trading on the market. Regular turnover totaled 83 million Kuna for the week, as compared to 123 million Kuna the previous week, which reflected a 32% decline. The CROBEX Index dipped below the 1,700 point level to close out the week at 1,681 points, a 3.7% weekly decline. The negative economic data released in the US and Europe did not help matters, as investors seemed to become more risk averse. It seems that some of the 'investment activity' has moved on to the money markets in Croatia, as over night and weekly bank rates climbed to a record high of 28% annually. Given the fact that the Croatian Central Bank (HNB) cancelled repo activity the previous week and the recent demand for Kuna's in the market, interest rates jumped to record levels. As a result, many institutional investors took advantage of the high rates and deposited funds with banks. Subsequently, the HNB held repo activity this past Wednesday and flooded the market with 7.6 billion Kuna, which brought overnight rates down to 6%.

Most of the liquid stocks were down for the week, Hrvatski telekom, which was the most liquid stock, was an exception to the rule. HT closed at 221.13 a gain of 0.82%, on volume of 23 million Kuna. Following HT was Atlantksa plovidba with volume of 14 million Kuna; the stock was 2.4% to 765 Kuna. Rounding out the top three was unexpectedly Croatia osiguranje; the stock traded a total of 5.1 million Kuna, as the price closed down by 3.2% for the week.

Companies in the news this week: Atlantksa plovidba plans to make a 50 Kuna advance dividend payment to shareholders; the decision still needs to be approved by the supervisory board which will meet this week. Plinacro has reached an agreement with the oil and gas company INA to acquire its natural gas storage facility for 514 milion Kuna. Plinacro will finance the purchase through bank loans guaranteed by the government.
